Chapter 1 by Hunter Perry

The crimson colored flames licked the the three sided brick walls it was confined to. Looking from his dwelling place in the home, he saw a small girl and a baby boy along with a older woman.

The woman had tears slowly dripping down her slender white face. Her hair was being blown behind her by a broken window. The fire could see that outside the window was simply a white field of powdery snow.

The baby boy immediately began to cry as he felt the chill of the breeze upon his face. The fire instantly began to expand as the flames grew hotter to comfort the baby whose only protection from the harsh weather was the baby's blanket in which he was being swaddled in.

The little girl was sitting on the floor playing with a doll when she inched towards the fire. She saw that the fire began to lose some heat, as if to not harm her. The little girl laughed and smiled as the fire became a form of entertainment for her, resembling animals and people doing different things. The baby, still wailing looked to what his sister was laughing at. He stopped crying and was too, mesmerized by the dancing and flickering red-orange pictures the flames created.

The mother however, did not notice the fire's flickery stories. Tears were still welled up in her eyes, as she was still tender from the instance the night before.
